COMMENT OF THE DAY

Better Relations

In the interests of the peace and security of the Middle East it is of profound importance that relations between Britain and Egypt should be harmonious and co-operative. Happily there have been recent signs that relations are beginning to move in this desired direction, though there remains much room for improvement. The contributing factors of a more durable friendship are however worth appraising.

First and foremost has been completion of the gigantic operation of evacuating the Canal Zone ahead of schedule, due largely to the excellent co-operation between the British and Egyptian authorities on the spot. That has helped in a considerable measure in establishing British goodwill.

Relations in the economic field have also improved to an extent that is often overlooked. Last September the British government agreed that Egypt could transfer £20 million a year from her blocked sterling account instead of the £10 million fixed in 1951. In exchange the Egyptian government announced that the import entitlement system would no longer apply to British goods. The important result has been a marked rise in Egypt's imports of British goods.

BRITAIN'S motives for desiring closer relations with Egypt are frequently misconstrued; yet they are highly practical and anything but Machiavellian. Britain is a trading nation and the Middle East is an important market. At the same time it is well to remember that the ability of countries like Egypt to trade on equal terms was made possible to a large extent by British enterprise and with British help.

Britain's interest in Egypt's programmes of internal development, and particularly in the High Dam project, is every bit as simple and practical. She wants to see the Middle East economically prosperous and politically stable. Hence her offer of a loan towards construction of the new Aswan Dam; hence also her anxiety at the economic, cultural and, even military rapprochement between Egypt and the Soviet bloc.

COLONEL Nasser has announced the setting in motion in Egypt of a more democratic political and social system—the release of political prisoners, the removal of Press censorship and the establishment of a parliamentary institution. This coincided with the announcement of more "liberalising" methods of government within the Soviet bloc, but there is no reason to believe as yet that the basic aim of Soviet foreign policy—namely, to establish just the kind of political and economic domination that Egypt so rightly fears—has changed.

There have, fortunately, been indications that the divergence of views between London and Cairo on Soviet policy is not quite so irreconcilable as it sometimes appears. While the Soviet aim in supplying Egypt with arms was to drive a wedge between Egypt and the West and to heighten tension between the Arab states and Israel, Col Nasser in his National Day speech laid special emphasis on Egypt's determination to fulfil her internal ambitions; to lay the foundations of a new society in which social justice and equality of opportunity are the main pillars.

These are ideals to which Britain herself has always aspired and which she has gone a long way to achieving. The British government, therefore, has every interest—political, economic and moral—in giving Col Nasser all the support it can in realising these ideals.

Commonwealth PMs Agree To Strive For... MORE TRADE WITH CHINA

Will Also Seek Improved Diplomatic Relations

From DEREK MARKS

LONDON, JULY 2.

THE COMMONWEALTH PRIME MINISTERS HAVE DECIDED TO PRESS AHEAD WITH EFFORTS TO IMPROVE TRADE AND DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS WITH PEKING.

AT THE MEETING TODAY THEY DISCUSSED THE RECENT DECISION TO INCREASE TRADE IN GOODS WHICH MAY BE EXPORTED TO RUSSIA.

I understand there was a general acceptance of Sir Anthony Eden's view that China should not be treated as though she were an inseparable ally of Russia.

Singapore Chief Minister's Opinion

BRITAIN SHOULD FORFEIT HER CEYLON BASES

Singapore, July 2.

Mr Lim Yew-hock, the Chief Minister of Singapore, said today it would be the "most sensible thing" for Britain to withdraw her bases from Ceylon.

Mr Lim was commenting on the announcement made in London today by the Prime Minister of Ceylon, Mr Solomon Bandaranaike, that Britain had agreed in principle to the withdrawal.

The Chief Minister told Reuter: "I welcome Mr Bandaranaike's statement. It shows that Britain appreciates the situation in Ceylon at its proper perspective."

Prostitutes Drawn Up Like A "Guard Of Dishonour"

TORY MP INDICTS LONDON VICE

London, July 2.

Sir Beverley Baxter, Conservative, drew a picture in the House of Commons tonight of prostitutes "drawn up like a guard of honour—or dishonour" soliciting in streets near London's Hyde Park.

He was condemning vice in the city's West End during a debate about matters under the control of the Home Office.

Sir Beverley Baxter said this sort of thing was "not paralleled in any other great civilised capital—New York, Paris or Vienna."

Criticising the law and the "inaction" of the police, he said prostitutes legally could not be approached because they were not causing a disturbance.

Yet nothing was done when "screams, quarrels, blasphemy and blows" accompanied disputes between the prostitutes and men who arrived to take percentage of the earnings.

Big gangs of these men were "coming out into the open," he said.

Mr Gwilym Lloyd George, the Home Secretary, denied charges of inaction by the police in tackling vice and other problems, but said police were handicapped by the present state of the law on prostitution.

He urged the Commons to await a report expected soon of a committee appointed by the government to suggest changes.—Reuter.

Big Ben Becomes Silent

London, July 2.

The chiming of Big Ben, from the famous clock towering over the Houses of Parliament at Westminster, were silenced tonight after they had struck nine o'clock.

A long overdue overhaul is being carried out, and the chiming which are familiar to radio listeners all over the world, will not be heard again for three months.

The British Broadcasting Corporation, which normally prefaces its major news bulletins with these unmistakable chiming, will relay instead the chiming of Great Tom, in the clock tower 100 feet up in one of the towers of St Paul's Cathedral.

Great Tom was first heard over the air when repairs were last made to Big Ben 22 years ago.—China Mail Special.

BOMB KILLS CHILD

Nicosia, July 2.

A Greek Cypriot child was killed and two soldiers were slightly injured today when a bomb was thrown at a military vehicle in the village of Komatou Yialou on the northeast peninsula of Cyprus.

Troops shot dead a youth allegedly stated to be the thrower of the bomb.

A wide-scale operation entered its second day today in North-east Cyprus where 1,000 British troops were reportedly searching for a Greek Army officer who was understood to have smuggled himself into Cyprus recently.

There was no official statement on the subject and officials said there would be none until the operation was over.

CURFEW LIFTED

Meanwhile, a night curfew on the Greek sector of Nicosia's old town which has been in force for the past 15 days, was to be lifted tonight, an official statement said.

A ban on the opening of all Greek-owned places of entertainment in the Nicosia area was lifted this morning.

A government statement said today that there had been further evidence of Greek Cypriot students having received terrorist training in Greece.—France-Press.

NIXON FOR TAIPEI

Geddyburg, July 2.

The Vice-President, Mr Richard Nixon, now on a tour of the Far East, will go to Formosa on July 7 to visit General Chiang Kai-shek, it was announced here today.—Reuter.

"Great Britain now realises that without the willing co-operation of the people, she cannot hold on to foreign bases. She should withdraw from Ceylon. It would be the most sensible thing for her to do."

Mr Lim declined to say whether Britain would be more conciliatory or more firm to the elected Singapore government's demand for independence following the loss of her naval and air bases in Ceylon.

Mr Lee Kuan-yew, leader of the leftwing People's Action Party in the Legislative Assembly, said: "It depends on the British Government. If Britain takes a long-term view of her interests in Singapore, she will be more conciliatory to the demand for Merdeka (freedom)."

Must Leave

Mr Lee said Britain had to leave Ceylon.

"It is the only thing she can do under the circumstances," he stated.

Mr C. C. Tan, chairman of the rightwing Liberal Socialist Party, said: "I don't think a British withdrawal from Ceylon would affect the British government's attitude towards Singapore."

He said Ceylon was independent and therefore had a right to ask for the withdrawal of all foreign bases.—Reuter.

S'pore Thugs Wage War

Singapore, July 2.

Police reported tonight another flareup in the gang war between rival secret thugs on Singapore's waterfront.

Following up cries of "help, murder," police found the body of a 22-year-old Chinese waterfront worker.

He had been stabbed to death. Later they discovered a blood-stained knife a few yards away.

Reserve constables, called out to deal with the gang war, were combing round-the-clock waterfront haunts along the waterfront for suspected thugs tattooed with their secret society numbers—"108" and "214".

In a raid on a house in Singapore, detectives recovered a pistol and ten rounds of ammunition.

They reported it was the weapon missing from the office safe of the Commandant of Singapore's Special Constabulary to the central police station last December.—Reuter.

Moscow, July 2.

Mr Dag Hammarskjöld, the United Nations Secretary-General, flew into Moscow tonight for a three-day visit and talks with Soviet leaders.

The UN chief executive is on a European tour.—Reuter.

The prime ministers recognised that there was no chance of a major rethinking of Western policy toward China until after the American presidential election. But they agreed that in the meantime the Commonwealth countries should take every opportunity of improving relations.

In a discussion of the Cyprus situation, I understand Mohammed Ali of Pakistan stressed the vital importance of Turkey to the Baghdad pact—of which Pakistan is the most easterly member.

BIG CHINESE CONTRACT

London, July 2.

It was learned here today that Communist China recently placed in Britain an order for insecticides worth about £2,000,000 as well as large orders for fertilisers in other Western countries.

The order for the insecticides is believed to be one of the largest of its kind and is connected with the Peking government's 12-year plan for the development of agricultural production.—France-Press.

Workers Stranded

As nightfall approached, the gusty winds, with blasts up to 80 miles an hour, prevented additional helicopters from reaching the floor of the canyon and left 13 persons stranded there overnight.

Major Jerome Feldt, head of the helicopter unit, waited for a break in the wind to drop supplies to the stranded party.

Three helicopters managed to work their way down to within a short distance of the remains of one of the planes—the United Airliner—and the crew of the third helicopter brought out the mangled and burned remains of five persons before the wind closed down the rescue operation.

The wind almost brought on new disaster as a helicopter and a civilian plane narrowly avoided colliding at the last minute over the Grand Canyon National Park.—Reuter and United Press.

BIG FLURRY

There was also a big flurry in Whitehall today over the Ceylon bases. It came after Solomon Bandaranaike, Ceylon's Prime Minister, was reported to have said Britain had agreed in principle to evacuate bases in Ceylon.

The Ministry of Defence spokesman said tonight: "Preliminary exchanges of views have taken place but no agreement has been reached."

At the Ceylon High Commissioner's office it was said that Mr Bandaranaike had been asked whether Britain had agreed in principle to Ceylon's demand for the evacuation of bases and that the Prime Minister had replied "that is correct."

Mr Bandaranaike added that talks with the British government were going on very well and "we hope to make a joint statement toward the end of this week."

The two bases under discussion are the Trincomalee naval establishment and the Katunayake RAF station.

Whatever agreements are reached as to control of the bases the British government wants to retain some facilities in both of them.—London Express Service.

NOW HAS 25 WAR MEDALS

Hollywood, July 2.

Murphy, American Second World War hero who is now a film star, has been notified here that he has received two military awards from Belgium to add to the 23 which have made him the most decorated American soldier in history.

The new awards are the Belgian Croix de Guerre 1940 and the palm for the same medal. Murphy, whose exploits were with the American and Infantry Divisions in Italy and France, holds the Medal of Honour, highest United States award.—China Mail Special.

Air Tragedy Sequel

Bodies Recovered From Gorge

WINDS HAMPER HELICOPTERS

New York, July 2.

A helicopter today flew out of the Grand Canyon with five rubber sacks containing the first pitiful remains of the 128 people who died when two giant airliners crashed, possibly after a collision here on Saturday.

Men waiting on the rim of the rugged canyon, lifted the sacks from the army helicopter and transferred them to a waiting plane which will take them to the nearby town of Flagstaff for possible identification.

There were no survivors among the passengers and crews of the two aircraft, a Transworld Airline Superconstellation and a United Air Lines DC 7.

Rescue workers in the gorge continued to sift through the charred and tangled wreckage of the TWA plane for other bodies.

The other airliner smashed into a virtually inaccessible peak and so far it was not possible to reach it on foot.

Workers Stranded

As nightfall approached, the gusty winds, with blasts up to 80 miles an hour, prevented additional helicopters from reaching the floor of the canyon and left 13 persons stranded there overnight.

Major Jerome Feldt, head of the helicopter unit, waited for a break in the wind to drop supplies to the stranded party.

Three helicopters managed to work their way down to within a short distance of the remains of one of the planes—the United Airliner—and the crew of the third helicopter brought out the mangled and burned remains of five persons before the wind closed down the rescue operation.

FAMED WOMAN RACEHORSE OWNER SLAIN

London, July 2.

Miss Rachel Parsons, well-known racehorse owner and one of the richest women in England, was found dead from severe head injuries this afternoon near her property at Newmarket.

She was believed to have been murdered.

Miss Parsons, 75, was known as "The Grand Old Lady of Racing."

She owned over 20 thoroughbred horses and in 1954 bought the big Landsdowne Stables near the Newmarket race course.

Miss Parsons inherited a fortune of nearly £1,000,000 from her father, Sir Charles Parsons, inventor of the steam turbine for ship propulsion.

She also had a degree in naval engineering and was a member of the Institute of Naval Architects.—France-Press.

ANNA PAUKER REPORTED DEAD

London, July 2.

Rumanian Communist leader Anna Pauker has died in Bucharest, the Manchester Guardian reported today.

The Guardian, quoting a Rumanian exile paper in Paris, said the woman, one of the founders of the Communist Party in Rumania, died a month ago at the age of 63 and was buried quietly and without ceremony.—United Press.

BRITAIN WORKING OUT ENTIRELY NEW DEFENCE POLICY

London, July 2.

Leaders of the British Government and armed forces are studying plans for a general revision of British defence policy, an informed source said today.

The revision would affect the structure of Britain's relationship to the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation, and particularly its troops stationed in Germany.

It would also affect the British system of bases throughout the world which—in Cyprus, Jordan, Aden, Ceylon and even Singapore—is threatened by local nationalist demands.

The source said that Britain's desire to modify its relationship with NATO springs from four sources:

(1) The difficult situation of Britain;

(2) The lack of enthusiasm of Germany for its own rearmament;

(3) The fact that France has withdrawn a part of its troops from Germany; and,

(4) The possibility of transforming a conventional army into an army equipped with atomic weapons.

Eden's Assurance

Prime Minister Sir Anthony Eden has indicated that Britain will not reduce its armed forces in Germany without the agreement of its allies.

Informed circles, therefore, expect that the British government will make known its intention to reduce these forces at the next meeting of NATO, next December 2.

The United States, which had previously opposed such reductions, now seems to have revised its attitude somewhat because of the rapid development of ever more powerful atomic weapons.

Britain now believes that, at an earlier date, than had previously been expected, she will be able to end compulsory military service, reduce her defence expenditures and adopt a policy most suited to the new international situation.—France-Press.

"Big Top" Blown Down

New York, July 2.

A gust of wind blew down the "Big Top" of the Barnum and Bailey Circus in Geneva, New York, last night just as a tight-rope walker was dancing on a rope before 1,000 spectators.

Fourteen persons were injured in the momentary panic that followed the gust, while the acrobat was badly hurt and stated to be in a serious condition.

Damage was estimated at US$30,000.

Tomorrow's performance will be an open air one.—France-Press.

US SHOULD ACT QUICKLY IN EUROPE

Basic Foundation Of Freedom Could Collapse

Washington, July 2.

Senator Mike Mansfield, one of the most influential members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, today declared that unless the United States acted quickly to "preserve and strengthen the basic foundation of freedom and peace in Europe", the collapse of the last 10 years' efforts would "prepare the ground for totalitarianism and a third world war."

The Democrat Senator from Montana, in an important Senate speech, asked the Government to offer America's help in ending the Algerian conflict and in finding a solution to the Cyprus problem.

Pointing out that "Europe may now be receding" on the road to integration, Senator Mansfield stated that "beyond Cyprus and the similar difficulties of the

Honeymoon On Racing Cycles

Capetown, July 2.

The old favourite song, "Daisy, Daisy, give me your answer do", which concerned marriage and a bicycle, came true when Miss Valerie Ashall was married to Alan Miller, ex-Western Province cycling champion.

After the wedding reception the two set off on racing bicycles for a three-week honeymoon to Kysna, on the eastern coast of the Cape.

Instead of a motor car with messages scrawled all over it and old shoes hooked to the back, two racing bicycles, austere and workmanlike, waited at the door ready for the touring saddlebags to be attached.

Necessities

Into each saddlebag went the absolute necessities for a cycling tour—shorts, shirts, cycling shoes, slacks and extra woolen socks.

The bride's going away outfit consisted of a snug blouse, warm green jersey, grey shorts, white socks and sensible brown shoes. Her husband wore an almost identical outfit.—China Mail Special.

Smuggling From Nazis Not Offence

Berlin, July 2.

German Jews who smuggled shares and other assets out of Nazi Germany before the war committed no offence in doing so, the International Court of Restitution ruled in West Berlin today.

The court ruled that a case brought by the Nazi authorities against a Jewish woman who left Germany taking her assets and shares with her was an abuse of power.

Her property was confiscated by the German authorities, and the court decided that she had a right to compensation.—France-Press.

India Asks Disarmament Commission To Discuss A-Test Ban

By JOHN HEFFERNAN

New York, July 2.

India today submitted a "note verbal" to Mr Dag Hammarskjold, United Nations Secretary-General, asking for consideration by the Disarmament Commission of India's proposal for a ban on all test explosions of nuclear weapons.

In its note India said: "The Government of India would feel seriously concerned if another year should pass without careful and full consideration being given by the Commission and its sub-committee to the need for agreement on a cessation of nuclear weapons and for the establishment of an armaments truce."

It was further asked what opportunity would be given for India to present its views on these proposals. It said that a written memorandum would not be adequate and that the Indian Government would, therefore, wish to make an oral presentation if invited to do so.

Not Member

It was understood that there had been tacit agreement that Mr V. K. Krishna Menon, Minister without portfolio in the Indian Cabinet, should appear before the Commission next week to present his government's views.

India is not a member of the Commission, which is composed of the eleven Security Council members plus Canada. Mr Menon, who is at present in London is expected in New York at the end of this week.

Mr Andrei Gromyko, Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister, who took part in the private five-power discussions in London, unexpectedly arrived in New York today to sit in on the Commission debate which opens tomorrow.

Informed speculation was that the Soviet Foreign Office had decided to send Mr Gromyko in South Africa To Retain C'wealth Ties?

London, July 2.

The South African Premier, Mr J. G. Strijdom, may have reassured Sir Anthony Eden this weekend that, even if South Africa left the Commonwealth, she would retain her economic and cultural ties with it, informed sources said today.

Mr Strijdom, together with the Canadian Premier, Mr Louis St. Laurent, and Lord Malvern, Premier of the Central African Federation, was a guest of the British Premier, Sir Anthony Eden, during the weekend.

Not Wanted

Although the subject of South Africa's becoming a republic and contracting out of the Commonwealth has not yet been raised officially at the Commonwealth Prime Ministers' conference, now in progress, informed sources said Mr Strijdom may have used the weekend at Chequers, Sir Anthony's official residence, to discuss it with the British Prime Minister.

Mr Strijdom publicly restated in a speech in London last week that South Africa would not cut all her ties with the Commonwealth if she were to become a Republic.

Part Of Policy

Another matter which the two premiers were expected to discuss this week was the question of Swaziland, Bechuanaland and Basutoland the three British enclaves in South Africa which the Union is anxious to take over.

The weekend talks are part of Sir Anthony's policy of meeting all the Premiers gathered for the Commonwealth conference informally.—United Press.

Russia Less Likely To Start New War

BUT DULLES SEES NO IMPROVEMENT REGARDS CHINA

Washington, July 2.

The Secretary of State, Mr. John Foster Dulles, has told Congress that the chances of the Soviet Union starting a war are less than they were a year ago.

But, he added that he could not "record any comparable improvement as regards China."

In secret testimony before a House appropriations subcommittee, made public in a censored form today, Mr. Dulles said the situation was not as menacing, even though the Soviet Union's economic capability to make war was great.

"There was tangible evidence of forces working inside the Soviet Union which might in time diminish the threat of communist to the free world," he declared.

Reckless

Mr. Dulles warned against the United States letting down its guard.

"It would be reckless to say that as long as the Soviet Union is spending approximately 20 per cent of its gross national product on policies that are primarily hostile to us, that we should cut down materially on effort, which we believe are needed to meet that peril," he said.

Mr. Dulles appeared before the committee on May 24 and June 13 in support of President Eisenhower's 4,900 million dollar foreign aid program.

Mr. Dulles reported that the Russians, under their "new look" foreign policy emphasizing the non-military approach, have put up about a 100 million dollars worth of foreign aid in the last 18 months in the form of easy-term loans.

Mr. Dulles said that the announced Soviet plan to cut its forces by 1,200,000 would not reduce their military potential but could help its economy.

Would Be Disaster

The Secretary of State once a picture of encouragement from what he called "forces of liberalism" in the Soviet Union since Stalin's death. He said development such a greater freedom of thought might bring about a genuine change in the Soviet Union over a period of years, the next ten years.

But he said it would be disaster to think that such a change had occurred already that the United States could let up on its own security efforts. He added:

Scotch Gift For Hongkong

Edinburgh, July 2. A Scottish pennant was presented to the commander of the P & O cargo ship Sunda by the Provost of Grangemouth at a reception on board the ship at Grangemouth today.

The Sunda, which is the first "N" class ship out from Scotland on the company's expanded Far East service, will fly the pennant whenever she leaves or approaches the port.

She will shortly be leaving for Penang, Port Swettenham and Hongkong.

At today's ceremony, Mr. Logan Strang, member of the Council of the St. Andrew's Society, handed two silver quaila (drinking cups) which the Sunda's commander, Captain E. J. Kerridge, will give to the St. Andrew's Societies of Singapore and Hongkong.

The cups will be accompanied by two cases of Scotch whisky presented by the Scotch Whisky Association. — China Mail Special.

Ike Feeling Stronger

Gettysburg, July 2. President Eisenhower told his doctors today he feels "stronger and stronger each day." But he gave no hint as to what effect his improvement might have on his second term plans.

White House News Secretary James C. Hagerty, who relayed the report on Mr. Eisenhower's condition, merely laughed when he was asked as to what effect plans to attend the Republican national convention. It opens in San Francisco just seven weeks from today.

However, Mr. Hagerty said it would be wrong to say the President is "testing" himself as he did after his heart attack last year. — United Press.

Israel Seeks Closer Ties With Asia

Jerusalem, July 2.

Israel sees herself as an integral part of Asia and wants to strengthen her ties with all Asian countries, Golda Myerson, Israel's new Foreign Minister, told her first news conference today.

She also said that while Israel's policy is not to interfere with anyone, the nation will not tolerate interference from anybody and we won't let our border settlers stand in danger of their lives.

There will be no radical change in Israel's foreign policy, she said, and the country will "work through the United Nations with all states who seek peace, no one in an Arab country need stand in fear. It all depends on the Arab authorities."

On the subject of Asia, she said:

"Israel sees herself as an integral part of Asia and will do its utmost to strengthen its ties with the Asian states, large and small. Many of them achieved their independence at about the same time as Israel, and we have much in common. We hope our friendship with Burma won't remain an isolated incident." — United Press.

Camera As Bank Bandit Trap

Wilmington, July 2.

A Boston bank is trying out a new kind of bandit trap which shoots film instead of bullets, according to an article in the latest issue of a magazine published here by E. I. du Pont Nemours and Co.

It is an automatic camera which operates silently and invisibly from behind a one-way mirror to capture on film everything that happens during a hold-up.

The one-way mirror, only slightly larger than a peep hole, is bullet-proof, and the window shows just where the bandit stepped, so that detectives could possibly pick up heel marks on the floor. A heel impression has proved as helpful as a fingerprint in the solution of several famous crimes.

The magazine said that the criminal might be tripped up by the camera patrol before he even stages the hold-up. Films taken daily would be checked routinely by law enforcement officers, and since hearses in advance, known criminals entering the bank could be spotted and placed under surveillance.

Suspicious behaviour by anyone entering the bank during business hours might also become apparent in routine examination of what the camera saw. Evidence of odd actions could serve to alert the bank.

The new camera technique was praised at a forum at Massachusetts police chiefs by Mr. Edward Powers, special agent in charge of the Boston office of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. Both the FBI and the Massachusetts Bankers' Association have encouraged the study of the camera method. — China Mail Special.

Soviet Trade Mission To UK

London, July 2.

A Soviet trade mission will arrive in London toward the end of this week to discuss goods to be exported by Britain to the USSR during the next five years, the Board of Trade announced today.

Representatives of the Soviet Union have said they would buy goods valued between £200,000,000 and £1,000,000,000. — France-Press.

Kilwe, Northern Rhodesia, July 2.

The engine of the north-bound mail train came adrift from the coaches near Kafuafuta, about 20 miles south of Eswana Mubwa and passengers looking out of the windows had the novel experience of seeing the train slowing down while the engine pulled away.

This engine, without the weight of the train behind it, surged forward before it was stopped nearly half a mile further on. — China Mail Special.

Soviet Air Display

This year's Russian Air Force Day was attended by delegates from 28 countries. Emphasis in the show was on fighters rather than bombers—only 16 medium and heavy bombers taking part in the show, as compared with more than 130 fighters. Picture top shows US air chief, General Nathan Twining, right, with Soviet Defence Minister Marshal Zhukov, centre, and Communist Party Chairman Nikita Khrushchev, right. Picture at bottom shows four on the aircraft taking part in the show. Top left is a twin-engine helicopter; top right a swept-wing fighter; bottom left a twin-jet bomber; bottom right a four-jet bomber. — Express Photo.

Rakosi Told To Toe The Line

London, July 2.

Hungary's Communist strong-man Matyas Rakosi has been ordered by Moscow to "mend his ways" and toe the anti-Stalin line, diplomatic dispatches from behind the Iron Curtain said today.

NEW CHINA AIRLINE

Paris, July 2. The Urumchi-Altai airline will be inaugurated in September, this year, Radio Peking announced today.

The radio said that the Sinkiang-Uighur Autonomous region will have a more than 1,710-kilometre airline between Urumchi and Hkoton, a port network with Urumchi as the centre.

The airlines in Sinkiang have now stretched to places south and north of the Tianshan mountain range and to reach major cities in this country and Alma Ata of the Soviet Union.

The radio also reported that the 1,710-kilometre airline between Urumchi and Hkoton was formally opened to traffic today.

The trip will take seven hours, the radio said. — France-Press.

No Answer To Food Offer

Washington, July 2.

The United States has not received any answer from the Polish Government concerning the offer made last Saturday to send food to Poland, the State Department spokesman disclosed today.

The American food offer was made through the intermediary of the American Red Cross. — France-Press.

SHEPILOV'S VISIT INDICATES

Soviet Policy Change In Middle East

London, July 2.

The recent Middle East tour of the new Soviet Foreign Minister, Mr. Dmitri Shepilov, has set off a fresh round of speculation here about the extent to which Soviet Russia is backing the Arab States. It is seen in diplomatic quarters here as liable to have an important influence on Middle East stability.

Mr. Shepilov's visits to Cairo, Damascus and Beirut followed an incident at the Security Council in New York early in June which has generally been regarded as marking an important policy switch.

At the conclusion of the London visit in April of the Soviet Prime Minister, Marshal Nikolai Bulganin, and the Communist Party First Secretary, Mr. Nikita Khrushchev, a communiqué said that the parties to the talks would back initiative by the United Nations to get "a peaceful settlement on a mutually acceptable basis" of the Arab-Israeli dispute.

Tension Increased

This phrase in the communiqué was interpreted in British diplomatic quarters as meaning that British and Soviet statesmen were agreed on the need for a policy calculated to damp down existing Arab-Israeli tension.

In the Western view tension in the Middle East had greatly increased since the conclusion of the Czech-Egyptian arms deal in the autumn of 1955.

Western policy on the supply of arms to the area is based on the 1950 Tripartite Declaration by the United States, France and Britain. By this declaration, the three signatories aimed at equalising the supply of arms to both sides in the Arab-Israeli conflict and restricting the quantity to an amount sufficient to ensure self-defence.

The Communist decision to supply arms to Egypt was taken as an indication that the Soviet Government and its allied States had ceased to be neutral in terms of the Arab-Israeli conflict and had decided to back the Arab States.

Following the issue of the Anglo-Soviet communiqué at the conclusion of the April talks in London, diplomatic quarters here assumed that the Soviet Government had again decided to work for a settlement of the conflict.

Speculation

At the same time, tension in the area dropped following the conclusion of the mission to the Middle East of the United Nations Secretary-General, Mr. Dag Hammarskjöld.

But speculation about the policy and intentions of the Soviet Government revived at the beginning of June when the Soviet representative in the Security Council backed a successful Arab drive to amend the text of a British resolution calling on Mr. Hammarskjöld to continue his "good offices" for peace in the area.

In response to Soviet-backed Arab objections, Britain dropped from the proposed resolution a phrase calling for a "peaceful settlement on a mutually acceptable basis," despite the fact that this phrase had been included in the April Anglo-Soviet communiqué.

The amendment of the resolution, in a sense opposed by Israel, was said by many usually well-informed sources to have been one of the causes of the resignation of the Israeli Foreign Minister, Mr. Moshe Sharett, toward the end of June.

The indication of a shift in Soviet policy on the Arab-Israeli question was followed by the visit of Mr. Shepilov to Cairo and Damascus, apparently for important policy talks.

Unknown Factor

A visit by Mr. Shepilov, then editor of Pravda, to Cairo in the summer of 1955 is considered in British diplomatic quarters to be the start of the pro-Arab policy of the Soviet bloc—a policy possibly resulting from the personal initiative of the now Foreign Minister who succeeded the veteran Mr. Vyacheslav Molotov on June 1.

The unknown factor in the Middle East situation, it is now felt here, is the extent of support for the Arab cause secured by Egyptian and Syrian statesmen during Mr. Shepilov's recent tour. — China Mail Special.

'ADVANCED WEAPONS' FOR JAPAN

Washington, July 2.

"Advanced weapons," presumably missiles of the "Honest John" or "Nike" type, will be included in the high priority American military aid programme for Japan during the present fiscal year.

This was disclosed in testimony by top-ranking American military authorities before the House Appropriations Committee. These testimonies were made public today.

This programme, which represents up to date the most important flow of military material from the United States to Japan, includes also jet aircraft, warships, tanks and other weapons.

NOT SPECIFIED

The amount of this programme in dollars was not specified, but according to a committee member, the involved cost is 12½ times as much as requested for the fiscal year completed on June 30 and represents about half the amount spent on military aid to Japan from 1950 to 1955 inclusive. — France-Press.

Furniture Swindle

Singapore, July 2.

Confidence men posing as purchasing agents for millionaires, have swindled dealers of thousands of dollars worth of furniture.

A man walks into a furniture store and asks the owner whether he can furnish a flat for a woman friend of a millionaire. He impresses on the proprietor the need to keep the transaction a secret.

The owner, feeling that he has been taken into the confidence of a millionaire, is generally more than happy to sell his furniture.

The confidence man then tells the dealer to deliver the goods at the country residence of an absentee millionaire.

After delivery, the dealer does not ask for immediate payment for fear of offending the millionaire.

That is the last he sees of his furniture. — China Mail Special.

CONCLUDING THE REAL INSIDE STORY OF THE GAY PRINCE, by SEFTON DELMER

Bernhard's Daughter, The Future Queen

THE palace sentries presented arms, the police held up the traffic, and the five of us crossed the wide motor road which passes in front of the royal palace at Soestdijk.

"Pappi," as Prince Bernhard is known to his daughters, was taking the three eldest of them, their friend Renee, Van Hooft, and myself on their regular Sunday after-lunch visit to the stables.

Each of the girls had a bowl which she filled with carrots. Each had a horse of her own to feed and fondle.

The routine

THE prince fed a bowl of carrots to his horse and learnedly discussed the horse and its condition with the princesses and Renee, who is the daughter of an ADC and is being brought up with Princess Beatrix.

To tell the truth I myself am not over-interested in horses or horse talk. But here I was fascinated. The regular visit to the stables is part of the prince's routine in the education of his daughters.

And there are few better indications of a man's character than how he sets about bringing up his children.

Moreover, I have been watching him at this father business ever since these earliest days when the "Gay Prince" would put a bottle of whisky in baby Beatrix's pram to shock and alarm the nanny—with mother Juliana joining in and pretending to be horrified as well.

And for another thing, Princess Beatrix is likely one day to succeed her mother—a day which, as the result of the faith healer crisis, Beatrix herself, I understand, believes may be quite near.

Well, how has he set about it? As you would expect, with much the same skilful tightrope balance between authoritative formality and easy, cheerful informality which characterises his general method of dealing with people and situations.

He is "Bernie" to the queen and his family, "Hanno" to his eldest friends. The prince's name for the queen is "Lulu."

The girls, for instance, are allowed to choose whatever hobby or sport they want, with one exception. "Pappi" insists they have all got to swim whether they like it or not. "Fortunately," he says, "they all like swimming."

But here is the limit to this liberty. Whatever the princesses do take up they must take up thoroughly and methodically with coaches to teach them. "Pappi" Bernhard insists there is to be no fooling around.

Princess Beatrix has taken up sculpting. I was quite impressed with a bison she gave her father for Christmas. It has a most uncanny resemblance to Comrade Bulganin.

The queen herself has been all in favour of freedom and informality for the princesses. Almost too enthusiastically so, perhaps.

Her own lonely childhood was hedged in from the age of four with curtsying ladies-in-waiting and a protocol which insisted that the little princess must precede her elders on all occasions.

Now... a curb

QUEEN Juliana is determined that her own children shall grow up free from such misery. The same impatience with formality and pomp which has made Queen Juliana ban the curtsying from her court (much to the regret of the ladies who love curtsying) caused her to send Princess Beatrix to a so-called progressive school.

The prince, however, had been through a normal childhood and a normal education. His mother (an aunt of Gottfried von Cramm, the present husband of Barbara Hutton) put him through a boarding school from the age of 12, where the prince used to get beaten up regularly by the other boys for being a prince and not a bourgeois like them.

Later he read law at Berlin University, where he took the equivalent of a first class honours degree.

So when the prince discovered that "Pappi," as he calls her, was not getting on very well with the three R's at the go-as-you-please and freedom-first academy, he insisted that she should be sent to a more orthodox school. The queen regretfully agreed.

Since then all the princesses have been going to the local secondary school at Baarn. They are treated exactly like the other girls and join in all school activities.

But with all this democracy, the prince—applying his old technique of balance—is now imposing a curb of royal reticence and dignity on the young princesses. To remind her of her status, orders have been given that henceforth she is to be addressed as "Your Royal Highness."

And the prince is wondering whether he might not have insisted on this sooner... as an educational measure in much the same way as boys in French schools, on reaching the age of 16, are given the dignity of a "voisin" instead of the familiar "tu."

But the problem of the princesses' titles is the least of the worries affecting the prince as a father at the moment.

His main concern is how to prevent his daughters being affected by the crisis at the court over the faith healer, Great Hoffmanns.

There certainly seems little danger of the girls coming under the healer's spell. Though the prince (who refused to discuss the Hoffmanns case) will neither confirm nor deny information, I gather that Miss Hoffmanns' failure to so much as cure a common cold or a rash of pimples on the occasions she was asked by members of the royal household, has completely undermined her reputation as a healer with the princesses.

Pranks

IN fact, I am told they are having to be restrained from pranks at Miss Hoffmanns' expense.

Last Christmas they wanted to act a charade in which one character after another would come on and pronounce himself or herself cured miraculously of some illness.

The Gay Prince heard of the plan and put his foot down and stopped it.

How much he must wish he could put his foot down as easily as his father's. Now that he is back in Holland you may be sure he will have a try.

"We're coming back Tuesday for Ascot."

THE British Commonwealth's greatest heroes—300 holders of the Victoria Cross—paraded in London before the Queen last Tuesday to mark the centenary of the most treasured award for valour. They came from all walks of life, and among them were some who showed qualities outstanding even by the standards of these heroes. This series tells their stories. Already told: the story of midget submariner Magennis. Now an air saga.

FOR SHEER GUTS, BEAT THIS ONE...

By Donald Gomery

NEXT time you are in a plane, if you travel by plane, look down hard at the ground far below, then look along the length of one of the wings. And imagine what it would be like to get out of that plane and crawl along that wing...

That's what Norman Jackson did. He got out of his Lancaster bomber and crawled along that wing—to put out a fire. "And I was doing pretty well too," said Jackson, long, long, afterwards. Pretty well. With part of a shell in his back and the other part in his leg.

It was the year 1944. The Lancaster was raiding the German town of Schweinfurt that night. Schweinfurt was in a cross. The raid was nearly over. The ack-ack had been fierce. Now came the German fighters.

Up went the Lancaster's wing in flames. So out went Jackson, fire extinguisher in hand. Behind him his parachute pack spilled open. Inside the plane they grabbed hold of the cords. Jackson's clothes were on fire. In came the fighters again. Jackson slumped over the wing of the plane. Jackson had had it. Or so it seemed. More shells ripped through the plane. The hands holding the parachute cords let go.

But Jackson wasn't dead when he fell off the wing. He wasn't unconscious. The parachute half-opened, and it too was on fire, smouldering like a huge handkerchief that any moment would burst into flames. The parachute cords were burning too, and Jackson's hands already burned, raised those hands as high as he could and ran them up and down the cords to put out the fires.

He landed on the side of a hill. He broke one leg and the ankle of the other. Jackson was in a bad way.

He crawled around for a time. "I thought of the telegram he had received that day saying his wife had had a baby."

'LUCKY'

HE crawled to a small house. Jackson knew no German. All he said when he opened the door was "H. A. F." But he knew the man who opened the door was in a violent rage; the word "Churchill" came in time after time.

The man was pushed aside by his two daughters. They brought him in, bathed his wounds. Two lovely girls. "I was lying there like Lord Rothschild," said Jackson afterwards. "I began to think I was pretty lucky."

Pretty lucky. With part of a shell in his back, the skin burned off his hands and wrists, his face burned, part of a shell in his leg, both legs broken.

Pretty lucky. They turned him over to the Luftwaffe. That was all right. The Luftwaffe treated him well. To hospital for 10 months, tended by captured British doctors. ("Wonderful fellows," Then to prison camp. And the first man he met there was his half-brother, Geoffrey Hartley, Coldstream Guards.

Norman knew that Geoffrey was missing, presumed killed.

Geoffrey knew (through the prison camp "Intelligence") that Norman was missing, presumed killed.

"We celebrated on brown bread and marmite," said Jackson. Warrant Officer Jackson, flight-engineer, got the V.C. for that night on the wing of a plane. Of course. Half-brother Geoffrey got the George Medal in Malaya years after fighting the bandits—in the end the bandits killed him.

Well, how does a man who went through a night like that, on the wing of a burning plane, settle down to a life of peace?

First, there was the small promise that Jackson made to himself in prison: "When I come out, if I ever come out, I'm going to have a good time for a while... a real good time."

And there Jackson began to build. With his own burned hands.

It was symbolic, really, this building of a new home, a new life, a new world. (The house his wife had lived in during the war had been destroyed by a bomb.)

Jackson had turned down a council job offered him at the end of the war: £4 10s. a week. He was a whisky salesman now. A good job. And the day's work over he sped to his place of land and built and built. till 11 o'clock, summer and winter.

His friends rallied round. Ron Taylor, for one. He is a professional builder. "Couldn't have done it without his help," says Jackson.

The house was begun at the end of 1947. It was finished by the end of 1948. A lovely house—four bedrooms, two living rooms, tiled bathroom and shower, big kitchen with garden back, front, and side.

MODEST

EIGHT people live in that house. Jackson, his pretty wife, and their six children. For one can build for the future in many ways. Ian, one of a half, David, three and a half, Peter, five and a half, Brenda, seven and a half, Pauline, nine and a half, Brian, 12—all once happily through the house that Jackson built.

"I believe in big families," said Jackson, V.C. "I was adopted when 18 months old." The most modest of men. What was it like that night on the wing of the plane? He shrugged his big shoulders. "Well...you got a pretty good slip-stream out there, you know. After all, people do 80 miles an hour on a motor-bike and think nothing of it."

It hardly seemed the same to me. "And if it's coming to you it can come in many ways. We had a wing-commander just finishing his second tour of ops. Gave through everything. Laid a big spread on for him. Then as he walked from his plane to the officers' mess and the spread, a station van hit him."

Jackson gazed through the window past his car, his garden. Thirty-seven years old, thick hair, thick-set, handsome—"These doctors did a fine job," said Jackson. The burns on his face don't show now. Only the burns on his hands.

MISSING.....

A MAN with just one small V.C. celebration business. "The invitations said 'decorations will be worn,'" said Jackson. And at the war's end, he had forgotten to claim his other medals: the Atlantic Star, the 39-45 Star, the Albrecht, the Victory in Europe, and the rest.

"So I've got only one medal to wear," said Jackson. "I wouldn't worry about that. Jackson, V.C. I wouldn't worry about that a bit."

PARIS NEWSLETTER from SAM WHITE

The Baronet Who Had A Letter From Buster Crabb Is Upset

Paris. SIR FRANCIS ROSE, the 46-year-old baronet, who created a stir by claiming he had received a letter from the missing frogman, Commander Crabb, posted on the day of his disappearance, is one of the most colourful members of the British community in Paris.

Sir Francis came to see me the other day in a state of considerable agitation.

He was upset for two reasons: first, that reports concerning the Crabb letter which disappeared from his flat some time ago, had attributed to him theories which were palpably silly; and secondly, that his 20-year-old son who is a Spanish subject, has been held for the past six weeks in a French prison without the detailed charges having yet been communicated to his defence counsel.

Crabb, he says, was a very old friend of his (he calls him "Crabby"), and the letter written on the notepaper of the Portsmouth hotel in which Crabb stayed before his disappearance was a brief note saying he was now in funds "because I have sold my invention" and could now repay a small debt.

THE SQUIRE

After Crabb's disappearance Sir Francis realised the possible importance of the letter and filed it among his private papers. Later when he decided to show it to the authorities, he found it had disappeared.

He then went to see the British Ambassador, Sir Gladwyn Jebb, and told him the full story. He does not for a moment believe that his son's arrest is in any way linked with the matter. Sir Francis, with his stocky figure, ruddy complexion, addiction to snuff, and beautifully cut slightly tweedy English clothes, looks like an English country squire. He is, in fact, a painter of considerable distinction.

He had until quite recently a large and beautiful flat overlooking Notre Dame, which he lost, and he now lives in what was once his servant's bedroom in the same building.

This small room he has transformed with admirable taste and ingenuity into a miracle of compactness. An effect of space is created by differently coloured walls and as the need arises it serves as kitchen, sitting-room or bedroom.

The walls are decorated with Henry Moore, Graham Sutherland and Christian Bérard originals.

Sir Francis was a great friend of Gertrude Stein, who was the first to buy one of his paintings in 1930, and he has decorated the cookery book written by Miss Stein's companion Alice B. Toklas.

MEMOIRS—2

THE second volume of General de Gaulle's war memoirs is now out, and superb stuff it is, too. The publication was timed for the anniversary of his famous June 18 appeal to France over the BBC, and it covers the period from the spring of 1942 to the liberation of Paris.

These are the highlights: ● A closely reasoned, extremely moving, and hitherto unpublished letter to the late President Roosevelt outlining de Gaulle's view of his own role in the war, disclaiming any ambition for personal power after the war, and pointing out the dangers inherent in treating with former Vichyites.

The President did not deign to reply to this letter. ● A verbal report of a conversation with Eisenhower. At one point Eisenhower said to de Gaulle: "I must confess that I have harboured some unjust suspicions of you." De Gaulle responded in his painstaking English: "You are a man."

Hillary, The Realist, Prepares His Antarctic Team

Wellington, July 2.

Sir Edmund Hillary, joint conqueror of Everest, has organised one of the toughest and most realistic exercises ever planned to prepare his team for their part in the Commonwealth Trans-Antarctic Expedition to take place during the International Geophysical Year.

Everything, right down to emergency landings by aircraft, has been taken into account when planning the test rehearsal on a high altitude icefield in New Zealand's Southern Alps.

'Depot 300'

The party, which will leave for the deep south during the summer of 1956-7, and for the major assault on the South Pole, will be made up of 12 men, 10 of whom will be in support of the main party, and 2 will be in the Antarctic.

During the training period in the Southern Alps, the team will be made up of 12 men, 10 of whom will be in support of the main party, and 2 will be in the Antarctic.

The team will be made up of 12 men, 10 of whom will be in support of the main party, and 2 will be in the Antarctic.

The team will be made up of 12 men, 10 of whom will be in support of the main party, and 2 will be in the Antarctic.

Communications

Five New Zealanders, including Sir Edmund Hillary, will be in the Antarctic.

One of the most important training tasks will be to establish a reliable radio communication between aircraft, sledges, and headquarters.

Sir Edmund Hillary, who will be in the Antarctic, will be in the Antarctic.

Emergency

Already the expedition's base in New Zealand and Australia, are at the Hermitage, where they are in the care of Mr. Harry Ayres, a veteran alpine guide and a member of the party which will go south.

He will be joined soon by Dr. George Marsh, an English dog-handling expert who has also been appointed to the New Zealand Antarctic party.

During August, the dog experts and others of the expedition members will do intensive training in dog care and feeding, sledging, driving, camping technique, assembling Nansen sledges, making dog harness.

surveying and navigation with sun compass and sledge wheel. The pilots who will go south with the expedition will practice solo emergency landings, spending nights on the glacier to gain experience in the use of emergency gear and in solo take-offs after pilot and aircraft have spent a night in icy solitude.

By August 22, according to Sir Edmund's present plans, his full team of 22 men will assemble in the Tasman Glacier area for final exercises over the next few days. They will spend nights on the glacier in tents and sleeping bags, using field rations, and their leader will be quite pleased if alpine blizzards conveniently blow up to lead complete reality to the occasion.

The syllabus for this period also includes ski touring, tractor driving on ice and snow, rope and ice-axe technique for rough conditions and crevasses, aerial supply dropping, survey and weather report practice.

The climax will be a full-scale Antarctic type expedition by most of the party, probably over the Tasman Saddle at 8,000 feet and down the Murchison Glacier.

Three dog teams will be used, and the expedition will move under rigorous field conditions, maintaining radio contact with base and receiving supplementary rations by air.

First Aid

Early in September the group will come down from the high snows to the low, open, army camp at Burnham, near Christchurch, for a first aid course, instruction, and final medical and dental checks, ready for departure in mid-December on its sixteen months of Antarctic expedition.

It will not be the fault of Sir Edmund Hillary if his men do not have a good personal idea of Antarctic conditions before they set foot on the icy southern continent. —China Mail Special.

BOY INJURED

A private motor car knocked down and seriously injured an 11-year-old Chinese boy at Prince Edward Road near Tung Choi Street on July 1. The injured lad, Tong Kwok-yip, residing at 203, Tung Choi Street, ground floor, was taken to Kowloon Hospital and detained for treatment.

A stationary motor lorry whilst being loaded with goods on the waterfront at Connaught Road West, near Sutherland Street, suddenly moved forward yesterday.

A Chinese pedestrian on the promenade jumped into the sea to avoid being struck by the vehicle. The pedestrian, 23-year-old Kwok Suk-kin, of No. 80, Connaught Road West, 2nd floor, sustained injuries and is now detained in hospital.

Five Stowaways Fined

Five Chin Chow men, who appeared before Mr. Hin-shing at Central Magistrate's Court this morning, were each fined $50 or ten days for being stowaways. The prosecution told the court that the defendants boarded the ss Vietnam on June 16, while she was lying alongside the Kowloon Wharf. Defendants hid themselves in various parts of the ship. After the ship had left Hongkong, defendants were found by Mr. R. Remorin, passenger agent of Messageries Maritimes Co., who was in charge of the tween-decks. The men were sent back to Hongkong aboard the Cambodia.

EAST TALKS PLANNED

Nasser, Nehru And Tito May Meet

Belgrade, July 2.

President Tito of Yugoslavia, Colonel Gamal Nasser, President of Egypt, and Mr Jawaharlal Nehru, the Indian Prime Minister, are expected to meet on the island of Brioni in mid-July for a general discussion on Middle East affairs.

Although no official announcement of such a meeting between the three leaders has been made here, it is noted that Colonel Nasser is expected here on July 12 or 13 for a State visit lasting a week while Mr Nehru, on his way back to India from the London Commonwealth Prime Ministers' Conference, has announced that he will pay an "informal visit" to Yugoslavia about July 17 or 18 during the period of the Nasser official visit.

Certain Cooling

(No official announcement of a Tito-Nasser-Nehru meeting has been made in Belgrade, but Egyptian sources have said that such a meeting is being arranged and a message from New Delhi included the projected meeting in Mr Nehru's programme.) Colonel Nasser is hoping to reawaken Yugoslav support for his Middle East policies. A certain cooling was recently detected in Yugoslavia's friendship towards Colonel Nasser, forged when President Tito visited Cairo at the New Year. Then President Tito, whose country had not before shown interest in Middle East affairs, came out with attacks on the Baghdad Pact, with support for the "liberation" of colonially oppressed peoples, and with the assertion that Colonel Nasser's intentions were non-aggressive. Since then Yugoslavia's public alignment alongside Egypt had become less marked because of several intervening events.

Above all, the attention of Yugoslav leaders had been absorbed by the new process of "de-Stalinisation" in eastern Europe, and they had less time to devote to the Middle East.

Declined

President Tito's State visit to France in May brought increased understanding in Belgrade for French views on many international problems, including North Africa.

In his talks with French leaders he appeared not to have taken Egypt's part in expressing full support for North African nationalists. In the communiqué issued after the French-Yugoslav talks, Yugoslavia limited herself to saying she would "support" all efforts aimed at a liberal settlement of the Algerian problem.

It was noted here that the Yugoslav Government declined to accept a subsequent Algerian nationalist proposal for mediation in the Algerian dispute. The proposal was made by Mr. El Abed Bouhafra, representative in the United States of the Committee of Liberation for North Africa. It foresaw joint mediation by three powers—Yugoslavia, Egypt and Italy—in supervising a truce and elections in Algeria.

Mr Bouhafra's visit was not given publicity in the Yugoslav press. Observers believed that, had he come after President Tito's return from Cairo in January instead of after the return from France in May, his mission would have evoked at least some expression of Yugoslav sympathy.

Not Numerous

In May also the Yugoslav Parliament sent a delegation to visit Israel as guests of the Knesset (Israeli Parliament). Since President Tito was in Egypt, Yugoslavia's relations with Israel had virtually stagnated, and observers said that the delegation's visit was in a sense a re-establishment of contact.

Admittedly the Yugoslav delegation was neither numerous nor a top level one. While Mr. Miroslav Pucar, President of Parliament, headed a 17-strong delegation recently to Bulgaria, Mr. Lazar Koliševski, President of the Macedonian regional Parliament, headed a six strong delegation to Israel.

The visit to Israel was given only limited publicity in the press here. Nevertheless, the visit took place, and Mr. Koliševski said on his departure from Belgrade: "I believe that the visit of our parliamentary delegation will contribute to the further development of friendly relations and co-operation between Yugoslavia and Israel."

Second Thoughts

Furthermore, observers believed that Colonel Nasser's cultivation of friendship with Saudi Arabia and the Yemen had caused second thoughts in Belgrade about the degree of intimacy there should be between Belgrade and Cairo.

Neither Saudi Arabia nor the Yemen could be, to say the least, considered progressive countries by the standards of socialist Yugoslavia. A feeling was thus detected that close friendship with Egypt brought strange bedfellows.

Despite a cooling in the atmosphere, however, Yugoslavia's continued interest in friendship with Egypt was emphasised by the appointment in June of Mr. Joep Djerdj as new Ambassador in Cairo. A former Ambassador to India and Burma, he has recently been one of the senior policy making advisers to the Foreign Secretary, Mr. Koca Popovic.

Sponge Fishermen

During his stay here Colonel Nasser is expected to discuss the extension of economic collaboration between the two countries. One notable event in this field since President Tito's visit to Cairo has been the departure for Egyptian waters of over 100, Dalmatian sponge fishermen. They are to fish for sponges in Egyptian waters with them, untrained Egyptian fishermen, so that Egypt can build up her own sponge industry. —China Mail Special.

CASEBOOK

Twenty Years On

HOW strongly the spirit of the old school tie flourishes in the remote regions of Kire, is a matter for speculation. It may be, indeed, that some other symbol, an old school shillelagh, perhaps, binds together Irishmen who as boys shared the pleasures and pains of education at the same establishment.

The spirit of the old school tie, in fact, was put to the test at any rate in Clereagh Court the other morning, for "Now Danny, you'll surely admit we wuz at school together, wuzn't we?" an Irishman named Michael appealed from the dock.

"We wuz," said Danny, as if the memory gave him no pleasure. He had just, in the witness-box, accused Michael of testing his wallet.

READY RECKONING

THE crime, he alleged, had taken place months before in the TV room of the lodging-house where both of them had been staying.

"Like this," Danny explained. "Michael owed me 5s., and he said if I'd got a pound, and would give him 14s., he'd give me the 5s. and we'd be straight."

Look out me wallet, then I thought it didn't seem right. So I took me wallet with me money in, and went away."

"Now, Danny, now," Michael pursued, "when we wuz at school wuzn't you always doing 'em to 'em? The time you told 'em I'd stolen their apples and I'd not."

APPLES

"WE'RE big men now, no, at school," Danny said, looking puzzled. "I don't see what apples has got to do with me wallet."

The magistrate came to his rescue. "What this man is suggesting," he explained, "is that you falsely accused him of stealing when he was at school, and that you're falsely accusing him now, because of some row that you'd had."

"I don't see where the apples come into it," he said.

Mr. Robey sighed. "He's saying you made all this up about stealing the wallet, to get your own back after a quarrel."

"No," said Danny, and stood down.

FOOLPROOF CASE?

A DEFECTIVE told of arresting Michael in Manchester the day before. "He said," the officer reported, "I know I did it, what do you think I'll get for this?"

"During the long journey he told me he had stolen the wallet," he said, but did not remember where, then he said: 'Don't think me clever, but I must try to get out of this.'"

"I never said any of those things," Michael challenged. "Isn't it right you said you'd a foolproof case against me, and I'd better plead guilty?"

"No," said the officer.

THE SCENERY

"DIDN'T you say 'Let's talk together as man to man,' and ask me when I was last in trouble in England? We talked about the case all the time, didn't we?"

"No," said the officer.

"What did we talk about then?"

"General points of interest—the scenery."

Reservoirs Lose Slightly

A second policeman corroborated the story of the first to the last detail. Michael went into the witness box and denied everything except that he had long ago quarrelled with Danny, and later had his efforts to apologise snubbed. He stood down.

The case was found proved, Michael, against whom there were 12 previous convictions, was sent to prison for four months.

He slumped away, avoiding Danny's stare, as a man might who finds himself ruined by someone with whom he once pulled an oar, or packed down in the scrum—or wielded a hurley.

Thieves' Plaint

Thieves gained entry into the offices of an Indian firm at No. 11, Hollywood Road, Central District, between June 30 and July 2.

The premises were ransacked but nothing was stolen.

The offenders wrote on a notice board in Chinese characters "Dim Kai, Mo Tsin" — "Why No Money"—before they left.

SUNDAY'S GAY PROM CONCERT

Sunday night's concert by the Hongkong Concert Orchestra was a gay affair consisting of standard and popular items. This time there were no experiments with movements from symphonies by the classical masters, and no soloists.

The whole evening's entertainment was provided by the orchestra in only, and its members, under their energetic conductor and organiser, Mr. Victor Ardy, played as usual with vigour and a swing.

The concert was in the Peninsula Hotel, and the nature of the room made for an intensification of sound volume, with the result that it was a little over-rehearsing for those sitting near, but just right for those sitting in the middle of the auditorium. In fact the real "promenade" section.

The Concert Orchestra is a well-rehearsed body and has an attractive and enthusiastic which are highly commendable, and it was noticeable, moreover, that the players' eyes watched the conductor carefully. It has never pretended to certain subtleties of expression which are essential for a different kind of music, but there was a tendency to play loud all the time.

A SUGGESTION

True, most of the music did not call for quietness, but Mr. Ardy would, I think, achieve a more satisfactory result from his orchestra if he trained them also in plans into playing, and aimed at more variety of expression. In the Rondo Suite by Percy Fletcher, for instance, the middle movement, "Old World Garden," would have benefited by being quiet and gentle in contrast to the first piece, "In the Hayfield," and the rollicking "Beau Peas."

The other items were a rousing march "Old Comrades" by P. Telke, Suppe's overture "Carmen," a selection from the "Mikado," such selections from Sullivan's lovely operas are always welcome.

After the interval came an item by Ivor Novello, "King's Rhapsody," two waltzes, and a Spanish dance, "El Relicario," by Jose Padilla, which received the best performance of the evening.

Two items, being speed for a second and sustaining a spirit of the enthusiasm, were could almost be said the Spanish dancers whirling and clapping their castanets.

WANTED TO DANCE

The final number comprised two Scottish dances, "The Skirl of the Pipes" and "The Eighteen Hells," accompanied by the orchestra, which was always heard with such dances. This leads us to suggest that an experiment might be made of allowing actual dancing to such music. Obviously many of the audience could hardly keep off their feet, and if space were available, surely it would be a popular idea to invite the audience to dance.

However, the audience did join in the community singing which has now become the practice at these concerts, and the evening ended in as spirited a manner as had begun. —X X
